Endocrine and cardiovascular function in patients with rapid cycling bipolar disorders. Patients with rapid cycling bipolar disorder (RCB) have received relatively little attention in the endocrine and cardiovascular literature. This study investigated endocrine (serum cortisol, prolactin, testosterone, and estradiol) and cardiovascular function (blood pressure, pulse rate, and heart rate variability [HRV]) in 18 RCB patients and 16 control subjects. We report greater serum cortisol and higher basal prolactin levels in the RCB group. Adrenergic response to a mental stress task was blunted, with lower gains and more initial response in RCB patients. HRV was not different between groups, and mood state and medication had no effect on any of the variables. These data suggest that RCB patients may have greater HPA activity and blunted sympathetic response to a stressor.Detection of superantigen-associated antibodies in patients with acute toxic shock syndrome. Acute toxic shock syndrome (TSS) is a life-threatening medical condition of unknown etiology. The diagnosis is based on clinical criteria, not on specific laboratory tests. Bacterial toxins such as exotoxins have been implicated in TSS; however, the role of antigens has not been clarified. Antibodies to superantigen-1 (SAG-1), staphylococcal enterotoxin A (SEA), staphylococcal enterotoxin B (SEB), and toxic shock syndrome toxin-1 (TSST-1) were measured with a Western blot technique in 76 patients with suspected TSS. Analyses were repeated before and after treatment. Before treatment, all patients displayed antibody binding against at least one of the four superantigens. A significant decrease in the level of antibody binding to SAG-1 and SEA (P Tumor-specific over-expression of human proapoptotic protein Bax suppresses tumorigenesis in the mouse. The mechanism that initiates apoptosis in tumor cells is often dysregulated and may play a role in tumorigenesis. It is widely believed that mitochondrial dysfunction contributes to
